To a recent number of the Tamuray we published in some detail, a criticism of the Dam of Canterbury's criticism of all then and things; and now we will very bridgy present a criticism of G. Washington Moon's criticism of the Dean of Canterbury's criticism; criticism; of the Dean of Canterbury's criticism; or the Berr. Dr. Altor, we will 'shakas' this midsamo of literary consideration. that the debetably points be referred to the Turnews of the people.

If you can be supposed by the control of the Turnews of the people.

If we can say of Mr. Moon's book must be most favorable. If we except the charge of hypercriticism and a sight tendency towards punning, we doubt whether Mr. Moon will ever find any unfavorable notices either in the press of America or his own country. The feeling which he has now country grafting for or approximation and a slight tendency to ovariey panning, we doubt whether Mr. Moon will ever find any unfayorable notices either in the press of America or his own country. The feeling which he has excited is one of gratitude for his optical defence of our mother tongen, and his simple and charte example of the proyer, the mobility and the coglomes of the language we speak. The animals of the property of the language we speak. The animals we shall show the language of perinalsy or affects and yet without a singular animals we shall show the language we shall be shown to the language we shall be language with the language with the language with the language with language we shall show the language we shall show the language we shall show who wish it o stipy the siyle of Mr. Mopu's spiry and matractive book, will last a besure weening and read in the well find room for a single quotation.
